

Forum: Bulletin Board i¼ ä½ àŠæ¼, i¼%

Topic: chatroom

Subject: Re: chatroom

Posted by: SoutheLily

Posted on: 2013/9/3 12:07:57

errr.....

Julia, there are something very special about this site, many of we old timers knowing each other quite well.

But it doesn't mean that we will dig into anyone's closet.

I am only telling you that we old chatters here are not only chatters, we are more like remote friends, distance isn't really a barrier for the friendship

Looking forwards to lots lots of the pleasant chats in future.

Quote:

julia1492 wrote:

Wolfy,

I agree with you wholeheartedly! The only way to improve the communication skills in a foreign language is to (well, what else!) COMMUNICATE with some others in that particular language. It does not matter how good your language level is as long as you try your best to get your message across. That is how I always perceive as the best way to learn. I have seen so many ESL students pass through our school. The chatty ones tend to get over the language barrier faster than others. So, be a chatterbox in the chat room if you truly want to improve. No one knows who you are and no one is there to judge you. All you need is to open yourself to welcome challenges and at the same time, make a few friends.