"I live by the railway line. Many trains go past here and, time and again, I watch the lighted windows fly
through the fluttering fluff-darkness.
So through eternal night
rush illuminated days
and I stand in each cubicle of light, I lean upon my elbows and am silent."

Some translated lines of a poem of a poet from a country that I have been during the last week ...
