Heyy, Dagege, let me introduce the Hungarian characteristics...

You have to know that small nations apt to see themselves in a funny way: we, as many others, enlarge ourselves, ha-ha.

It is an underground, not a metro (in other words, it was not built by drilling a tunnel but digging a groove), though it is true, it was the first on the continent. The yellow line.

Really???

I only know, ... that the Budapest Metro is the oldest electrified underground railway system on the European continent, and the second-oldest in Europe, predated only by the 1890 City & South London Railway.
