Hello S.Beauty

A belated humble opinion. Hope it is useful.

QUESTIONS are proceedings or processes that aim to augment knowledge, resolving doubt, or solving PROBLEMS. The theory is to obtain an account of the various types of queries and a treatment of each type of the query to achieve its aim.

It is also a methodology employed during the interview of a person, to obtain information that the source would not otherwise willingly disclose. A typical purpose is not necessarily to force a confession, but rather to develop, playing into the interviewee's character, sufficient to prompt the interviewee to disclose information valuable to the person conducting the interview.

Interrogation (conduct by the police and lawyers), yet another line of questioning, will usually involve mental torture which in practice is widely acknowledged to be effective at producing true, accurate, correct and reliable information.

Having said these, however, not every QUESTION deserves an answer!

PROBLEMS are obstacles that make things difficult to achieve a desired goal, objective or purpose. A PROBLEM is referred to a situation, a condition, or an issue that is yet unresolved. In a broad sense, a PROBLEM exists when an individual becomes aware of a significant difference between what actually is and what is desired. Every PROBLEM requires an answer or a solution. More often than not, QUESTIONS are raised before a PROBLEM is resolved.
