In Taiwan, the percent percentage of people having cars is sharply increasing. Are so many cars in our streets a curse or a blessing?

Most of people agree that cars can bring many benefits to the masses. By driving cars, we can have a free move to a more distant places, and enjoy door-to-door service save a lot of time. For various shops, the cars make their door-to-door services more efficient. Besides, it is safer than riding motorcycles especially in rainy days or on bumpy roads. These facts are very obvious advantages.

However, when enjoying the convenience, we also can't ignore that something harmful is produced at the same time. For example, it is well known that cars' waste gas causes air pollution and greenhouse effect, that a traffic jam usually delays a pre-fixed schedule fixed in advance, and that more and more people are injured and even die or even killed in traffic accidents.

We all know that every coin has two sides and the issue in question is no exception. So, in my opinion, as long as we face these shortcomings squarely; then and figure work out perfect solutions to them, such as inventing organic fuel, well-organizing the road networks and the traffice signs, and cultivating the habit of obeying traffic rules, etc. In this way, owning a car is really not a bad thing for us.
